Clowns' Star Returns To Accounting Course

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — Constance "Connie" Morgan, star infielder with the Negro American League champions Indianapolis Clowns, this week switched from bats to books as she resumed her studies at William Penn Business Institute.

The Philadelphia lassie, who held down second base for the Clowns and beat out a steady tatoon against opposing pitchers this season, was the star attraction with students around William Penn when she returned to continue her course in accounting.

CONNIE WAS asked by an admiring "fan" upon her return to class what her most unusual experience was during her first year stint with the Clowns.

With little hesitation, she commented that her most unusual experience happened on the diamond in Liberal, Kan., during a game with the Kansas City Monarchs.

THE GAME, she explained, was played in what was developing into a wind storm. She came to bat in the first inning and lined a one nothing pitch into left field that was tagged for a home-run. But at the last second, she signed, the wind got under the ball and blew it foul. She then went on to strike out.

"How unusual can an experience get," Connie laughingly asked, "especially when you're swinging for your first home-run"?

CONNIE joined the Clowns last April and saw action in every game. She played in big league parks from Key West, Fla., to Canada and from New York as far west as Texas.

She said she enjoyed the experience gained in travelling with the team and is looking forward to spring training. Connie admits, however, that her real objective to which she is also looking forward, is to be a top-flight worker in a business office.
